Product Description

A collector's model of the German battleship Gneisenau from the Second World War has been produced by the COBI company in a 1:300 scale model. It consists of 2,417 elements and is 81 cm long. It faithfully reflects the dimensions of the historic ship and retains all the essential elements, including the armament. The ship was chartered from "Operation Berlin 1941" (Atlantic). It was the famous pirate rally in the Atlantic with the battleships Scharnhorst and Gneisenau!

The model of the Gneisenau ship is covered with high-quality prints that do not wear out during use. Remarkable is the elaborately reproduced shape of the hull and the consideration to retain as many details as possible. The model has numerous moving parts such as: Propellers, rudders, rotating turrets and gun barrels that can be raised and lowered. The set also includes a very sturdy and aesthetic black display stand and a white plate with the name of the ship. Although the ship is very large, its construction is simple thanks to the intuitive building instructions based on clear symbols. Just under 2,500 elements ensure many hours of building and a great effect! The Gneisenau ship is an ideal starting point for fans of history, defence technology, the military and the navy. After assembly, the ship looks very impressive, attracts attention and will certainly add to the decoration of your collection, living room or office! Express your passion and build a story block by block!

The Gneisenau is a German World War II battleship that was commissioned on 21 May 1938. Both the Scharnhorst and the Gneisenau were a new type of German battleship. They were characterised by larger dimensions, speed and more powerful weapons. They were created in response to naval expansion in France. The Gneisenau took part in many combat operations, including the famous Operation Berlin in 1941, where it proved very effective. It was sunk in Gdynia on 28 March 1945 to blockade the harbour.
