Product Description

The PANZERKAMPFWAGEN E-100 was developed on a large scale of 1:28 from 1,511 elements and measures a full 37 cm in length. The size of the model made it possible to design the interior of the turret and the vehicle. The model provides access to the service hatch, under which there is a removable engine. Additional features include: rotating turret, movable cannon, access to hatches for the crew, working chain traction. The set includes a very interesting figure of a tank driver with an imprint on the back. Such a huge model offers many hours of exciting construction and will become a dominant exhibit in your collection! Build history, brick by brick!

The mighty Panzerkampfwagen E-100 is a somewhat mysterious German prototype super-heavy tank developed during the final stages of World War II. The vehicle was designed as part of the Development Series Programme, which aimed to develop a range of armoured vehicles of different types, possibly simplified and based on developed standards. Work, which began in 1943, was stopped by 1944. The Henschel company tried to continue its work on a limited scale. It was possible to produce a hull on which a modified Maus tank turret was to be mounted according to plans from 1943. Further modifications were also considered to allow the fitting of even larger calibre guns. Taken over by the Allies, the hull was sent to Britain for testing in 1945 and then scrapped. There is little photo and drawing documentation of the E-100 tank. Due to its excellent parameters, the vehicle is very popular and often appears not only in literature but also in games and video footage!
