Product Description

The Leopard 2A5 TVM is a prototype version of the German main battle tank, which is the successor to the Leopard 2A4. The main differences between these models relate to armour, fire control systems, navigation and observation. The final versions of tanks are at the forefront of the best weapons and supply the armies of many countries around the world. The model was created in cooperation with the German Tank Museum Munster, whose collection includes this example.

The Leopard 2A5 model in the TVM version has been faithfully reproduced from 945 COBI building blocks and realistically reflects the appearance of its museum counterpart. Movable elements such as: Turret and barrel of the tank, rotating wheels and tracks as well as completely new hatches that can be opened let all military fans enjoy the model. The tank's engine has also been opened, which can be seen by opening the service hatch. Any adult lover of history and armoured weapons will surely add this model to their collection. Attention: not suitable for children under 36 months!
