Product Description

Already after the first year of the war, the German Luftwaffe leadership had to recognise that the Junkers Ju 87B no longer met the requirements in many areas. The ever-increasing ground defences and fighter operations during the war led to a task restructuring of the Ju 87 as a battle plane. The D version received a more powerful engine, a new aerodynamic fairing and stronger armour. Its new task was now primarily ground combat, which included anti-tank operations using a 3.7 cm calibre gun. Finally, in spring 1944, work began on converting the Ju 87D-3 into G-1 and G-2 tank destroyers.
