Product Description

The history of the Citroen Traction 7A car is perverse. First of all, it was fitted with an engine that was too weak and did not arouse any enthusiasm. The model, which was only produced for three months in the period from April to July 1934, was quickly given new, more powerful engines. Thus the first version became the holy grail among collectors and the initial flaw became an object of desire. This car is the ancestor of many other cars in the Citroen Traction series produced until 1957! You don't have to look any longer. This automotive gem can also make a wonderful addition to your private garage. From a set of 222 COBI building blocks, you will build a classic French Citroen Traction 7A passenger car, licensed by Citroën, in 1:35 scale. Thanks to the intuitive instructions, the car is simple to build and easy to modify. Great quality, great prints and no stickers are the reasons why you will love this model. The set includes a figure of a soldier of the French Resistance Movement (French: La Résistance Intérieure Française) who has a ribbon with the emblem of his formation printed on his arm, as well as an accessory in the form of a Sten submachine gun. This is another figure that contributes to the ranks of the French nation. Discover automotive history block by block!
