Product Description

The American patrol boat PT-109 is the largest and most detailed model in COBI's history! The record-breaking 3,640 elements made it possible to realistically recreate the historic unit in 1:35 scale (scale to match the figures). The model is 72 cm long and includes a stand with signature. The model also surprises with a fully recreated interior! After removing the deck, you can see the crew cabins, technical rooms and engine room with their equipment! This has never been seen before at COBI! The model looks majestic, has been designed with craftsmanship and a lot of attention to detail! The whole set is complemented by four figures inspired by historical crew members. The set contains durable prints that will not rub off even with intensive use. Movable equipment, a removable deck, mapped weapons and a realistic shape make this model an exclusive gift that will satisfy not only history and military buffs, but also all brick lovers and picky collectors. You can't go past a boat this big and beautiful! Build a history, block by block! The Patrol TORPEDO BOAT pt-109 was commissioned in the Pacific in 1942. On 2 August 1943, the Japanese destroyer Amagiri rammed the pt-109, sinking the patrol boat. In a crisis, the unit's commander and future President of the United States managed to save the entire crew. The actions taken made him a war hero! The patrol boat was manned by a crew of 12-17. On the last mission, 13 crew members took part under the leadership of Captain Kennedy. The PT-109 was powered by three Packard 12-cylinder petrol engines producing 1,500 hp (1,100 kW). The speed of the boat was approximately 41 knots (76 km/h). The PT-109 had a single 20-mm Oerlikon anti-aircraft gun at the stern. On the eve of its final mission, the crew installed a 37-mm anti-tank gun in the bow. The boat's main offensive weapon was her torpedoes. PT-109 was equipped with four 53-cm Mark-8 torpedo tubes, as well as two depth charges and dual-coupled heavy machine guns. The activities of PT units in the Pacific and the legend of PT-109 and its commanders are still alive today and stir many emotions. PT-109 is present in history, literature, film and popular culture. Thanks to building blocks, COBI can reach you too! Build a story, block by block! Caution! Not suitable for children under 36 months!
