The Focke-Wulf-Triebflügel was a German vertical take-off and landing (VTOL) fighter project of the Second World War. Presumably, three Pabst engines were to provide propulsion. The deck armament was to consist of two 30-mm Mk.103 guns and two 20-mm MG-151 guns. The machine was never tested, let alone put into mass production. Caution! Not suitable for children under 3 years. Choking hazard due to small parts.
