Product Description

At 42,343 t, the Bismarck was the largest and most modern battleship in the world at the time (next to the Hood). On 24 May 1941, in a sea battle together with the heavy cruiser Prinz Eugen, she sank the largest British battle cruiser, the Hood, with the 5th salvo of her 38-cm guns at the pack ice limit off Greenland. Launched on 14 February 1940 at Blohm & Voss in Hamburg, she was, together with the identical Tirpitz, the most modern ship and the prestige object of the German navy. At 251 m long, the mast top reached 52 m above the water surface. A total of 17,450 t of steel were used for armour protection. The newly constructed heavy artillery fired 800 kg projectiles up to a distance of 34.2 km, whereby 350 mm armour could be penetrated up to 21 km. While the Prinz Eugen received no hits in the engagement on 24 May, the bow-damaged Bismarck set course for a French port. During the subsequent pursuit by British ships and aircraft, the ship was shot out of action by numerically superior forces of the Home Fleet after a torpedo hit the steering gear on 27 May 1941 and sank in the Atlantic about 800 km off the French coast. Of 2,092 men on board, 115 survived.
