Product Description

Barkas B1000 is a delivery van and microbus that was produced in the former GDR from 1961-1991. The only car of this class produced in East Germany. Barkas cars were mainly used in East Germany. The platform version is a panel van with a two-person cab. You can build a Barkas car with an open loading box from a series of COBI building blocks with up to 156 elements. The model has been faithfully reproduced on a scale of 1:35. The set is complete with stickers. The blocks have been covered with high-quality prints that do not wear off even during intensive play. The set has a well thought-out compact design and movable wheels. The model made of COBI building blocks will not only be a toy in the children's room, but will also contribute to the interest in the history of the automobile. It will certainly help to develop children's motor skills and improve their construction skills. For adult fans of blocks, it will be a beautiful model of a historic vehicle and perhaps the start of a future collection.
