Product Description

For many years, the Volkswagen Beetle was the car that started it all. Countless young people learned to drive with it, countless people drove it as the first car in their lives. Over the years, improvements were made to the vehicle again and again to keep the Beetle competitive. Even in 1968, the Beetle had a standard that still kept it competitive against the competition of the time. The former 1131 cc engine had now become a 1500 cc power unit with 44 hp output. Disc brakes at the front and a new semi-trailing arm rear axle kept this temperament in check. The headlights were now vertical and the tank could be refuelled through a side flap.
