Product Description

Mail Carriage - 248 Components

What represents the Wild West better than a stagecoach? The "Wild Wild West"-style model from the brand manufacturer UGEARS(R) makes film history and revives the steampunk western action comedy filmed in 1999 by director Barry Sonnenfeld. In light of this, we transport ourselves to a time when the locomotive was still called steam horse and the whiskey in the saloons was called firewater.

The wooden construct "Stagecoach", consisting of a total of 248 individual parts, offers both the model building enthusiast and the history-loving friend of old Indian and cowboy strips, the appropriate still life for his display case. The models from UGEARS(R), made of sustainable wood, make use of the art style of retrofuturism, which is also the focus of the aforementioned western film. The steampunk, which reveals the mechanism of the carriage with openwork surfaces, is therefore more than art, but a visual object with a learning character. Driven by a rubber motor, each gear movement can be traced to the smallest detail, making the present model attractive and unique. The horses pulling the carriage swirl the dust and neigh and snort.

Warning! Not for children under 3 years.
