Product Description

The Jaguar ground combat aircraft, which emerged from a joint project between the French and British aviation industries in the 1960s, was used by the Royal Air Force until the mid-2000s and was characterised by its extraordinary durability and operational efficiency. Thanks to its two turbo engines, it was able to reach Mach 1.6 and more. It was used in numerous missions in highly complex theatres of operations, including the Balkans and Iraq. The two-seat T2 training version was developed for the operational conversion of British RAF pilots. However, it was also capable of carrying out ground attack and close air support missions. Unlike the single-seat version, it was equipped with a single 30mm Aden cannon.
