Product Description

In the last campaign of Age of Sigmar, the Lord of Undeath Nagash returned to the stage. In his battle against the mortal world, which unjustly steals the souls that should be his, he sends a gruesome army of malevolent spirits into battle with the Nighthaunt. Opposing them are Sigmar's loyal followers, the Stormcast Eternals, armed with powerful weapons and magic. And the battle for the free city of Glymmforge begins ...As usual, the figures of the sigmarite-armoured Stormcast Eternals are full of loving detail. Clad in robes for the first time, they are once again equipped with an impressive arsenal of powerful weapons. Unlike Sigmar's warriors, the Nighthaunt miniatures do not impress with their massive armour, but above all with what they do not possess. They float above their bases in shreds and swathes. Whether it's the leader Knight of Shrouds on his skeletal steed Ethereal Steed or Lord Arcanum on his impressive Gryph Charger, all these miniatures should be stored and transported with care. It's a good thing we have the right set for you. The ghost miniatures and Sigmar's hero warriors are spread across three foam inserts, giving them a quiet and safe place away from the battlefield. There is one mat for the Stormcast Eternals and one exclusively for the Nighthaunt. On the third, both factions have to come to terms with each other. However, as they are carefully separated from each other, this should not cause any trouble. All miniatures are placed in customised compartments. Wrapped in soft foam all round, sensitive parts such as the Guardian of Souls' nightmare lantern or Lord Arcanum's aether staff are optimally protected. Annoying bending is prevented and the colours of painted miniatures do not flake off. A foam lid on the top insert provides the final protection for the figures on the top. The insert for the mixed faction also has 11 additional compartments for miniatures of ont flake off. A foam lid on the top insert provides the final protection for the figures on the top.
