Product Description

Twelve randomly drawn cards with things or animals are on display. Which two cards have something in common? Mmh, penguin and seal are a good choice! Surely the others think so too? Or would prefer penguin and orca? In the party game DUOS, up to six players choose four pairs per round that they think go well together. The selection is made secretly behind screens. Once everyone has finished, the pairs are compared. It is important to have as many matches as possible with the current "announcer". Each identically selected pair is rewarded with one point. The announcer also gets points, but only once a certain number of matches have been made. New round, new luck, new announcer, new category! Simply turn the cards over and continue playing with the other side. If everyone has been the announcer twice, the winner is determined. If you like, you are welcome to explain why you combined which cards. The discussions about this are often very entertaining. - Fun party deduction game for the whole family- High replay value, two themes on 116 cards for ever new combinations
