Product Description

ChronoCops is a time-travelling adventure full of crazy humour and a lot of tongue-in-cheek. The game idea is based on point-and-click adventures from video game history. As ChronoCops - agents of the most prestigious research department for time travel - the players travel through time to famous people and places where they have to solve puzzles. To do this, they have to put the right things together, think around corners, clear obstacles out of the way and thus work together to stop the insane Professor Knix, the ChronoCops' former mentor.

The players explore different timelines, which can only be gradually opened by successfully solving puzzles. In each timeline there are different jump points to which the players can travel. Some in the past or future, others in alternative realities. There are clues and objects hidden everywhere that the ChronoCops can collect and combine with the Chrono Decoder to use in a specific location. The group can also get tips from the back of the chrono decoder if they get stuck.

In Einstein's Relativity Crisis, Professor Knix wants to build a time paradox machine to unite all time lines into a single chaos. But the ChronoCops can't let that happen under any circumstances! To stop the mad professor, they need the help of Albert Einstein. But on their journey, the Cronks, Professor Knix's strange helper beings, get in their way once again.

Caution. Not suitable for children under 36 months.
