Somewhere in the Andes 3000 years ago, you lead the Quechua people into an uninhabited valley. You explore the different types of soil and try to grow the right plants. In doing so, you follow the rules laid down by the goddess Pachamama, mother earth and creator of the Andes. The most important rules are diversity and separation: the same plants will never grow in neighbouring fields and each area will produce different gifts, which also depend on the size of the area. You must therefore recognise which plants you can grow on which fields. You have 2 options on your turn: You can explore the area by moving a figure to an undeveloped field. Or you can make a divination. To do this, you use a wheel that the goddess has provided to help you. You receive points and gifts for correct divinations. - Deductive connoisseur game - Includes cooperative variant and solo variant
