Product Description

Rippling rivers, rustling forests, wheat fields swaying in the wind and a cosy little village here and there - that's village romance! The video game from the small developer studio Toukana Interactive has been delighting the gaming community since its early access in March 2021 and has already won all kinds of prestigious awards. Now Michael Palm and Lukas Zach are transforming the popular building strategy and puzzle game into a family game for young and old with Dorfromantik - Das Brettspiel. In Dorfromantik - Das Brettspiel, up to six players work together to lay hexagonal tiles to create a beautiful landscape and try to fulfil the orders of the local population, while at the same time laying the longest possible track and river, and also taking into account the flags that provide points in closed areas. The better the players manage to do this, the more points they can score at the end. Over the course of the replayable campaign, the points scored can be used to unlock new tiles, which are hidden in boxes that are initially locked. These present players with new, additional tasks and allow them to push their high score higher and higher. Die Dorfromantik - Das Brettspiel Fachhandelsausgabe contains the mini expansion "Die große Mühle" with two cards and a mill display in addition to the basic game. After completing the mill task, the success is unlocked, with which extra points for grain orders and yellow flags can be collected by cleverly placing the mill figure.
