Product Description

"No, I admit that I don't see any connection with our case either. Nevertheless, it is undoubtedly an important document." (Sherlock Holmes in The Sign of the Four) This adventure volume is set in the 1880s and sheds light on two of the many mysteries for which the British Isles are known. The first adventure is about the fabled crescent moon from Celtic mythology: is it really in the mysterious ancient barrow discovered near the small village of Reynoldston in Gower, South Wales, near Swansea? And how is it guarded? Once the secret of the barrow has been revealed, the journey continues to London, the financial centre of the late 19th century. The Bank of England itself is the starting point for an almost unbelievable adventure that begins with a robbery the likes of which the world has never seen before ... Von Hügelgrab and Dampfhammer provide the game master with two self-contained short adventures that can be used independently but can also be linked to our other products set in England. As usual, integrated sourcebook texts and extracts from contemporary sources create an atmospherically dense experience for the players in Victorian Britain.
