Product Description

In 1951, India commissioned the famous architect Le Corbusier to plan the capital city for Punjab. This was the birth of the city of Chandigarh. In this game, you take on the role of an urban planner and help Le Corbusier, who divided the city into sectors, to design this modern city in the north of India. You try to push through your projects. Whoever collects the most prestige points wins. On the modular game board, you decide on one of two possible actions each turn: Move your architect through the city and construct buildings OR take a new project card and gain prestige points. There are 4 different types of buildings that you try to construct in a pattern indicated on your project card and then score them at the right moment. Remember, however, that the other architects can of course also benefit from the buildings you construct. You also try to claim sectors for yourself by occupying the last building site there in order to gain more prestige points in a majority ranking at the end. Important notes: Caution! Not suitable for children under 36 months.
